From the Pastor’s Desk

As we have been walking through the Flourishing series there have been some really good questions that we have been pondering. “What does it mean to make a disciple? How do we do that? Aren’t small groups the place where that happens? What constitutes a small group?” These are great questions to be asking! They can also get confusing. As I think through all this, I keep coming back to a fairly simpler and more basic question. About a month or so ago I shared a challenge that had been given to me by a good friend. As I was thinking through how to best help some important people in my life my friend asked me, “Why don’t you just ask those people, ‘Where are you going and how can I help you get there.’” That question has changed a lot of my thinking and my relationships.

The question shifts the focus from what I think is best for someone else to ask them what is their heart’s desire. It assumes the very real possibility that God has already been at work in that person’s life and that I am there to help them with that. At times someone might not know where they are going, but I am there to help with that as well. In some cases, the relationship that I have with the person may not be in place where I can ask that question out loud. But that doesn’t mean I can’t simply ask the question of myself, “Where is this person going and I how can I help them get there?” As it dovetails with the ultimate question of God’s intentions for this person the question is at the heart of disciple-making. When you look at friends, co-workers, spouse, significant other, children, and you think of that question, “Where are they going and how can I help them get there?” what is the answer and what can you do to help them get there? If you are in some kind of small group perhaps the most important question is whether you are committed to asking one another, “Where you going and how can we help you get there?” If we can do that for one another as a church family I believe our lives will be far richer and deeper. In my humble opinion.

Blessings, Pastor Paul

Home-bound Communion

The first Sunday of every month is an opportunity for our church family to celebrate the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ through partaking in the Lord's Supper. We want everyone who has placed their faith in Jesus Christ to have the opportunity to participate, but we are aware that some in our family are not able to get out due to bad weather or physical problems. However, our Deacons will be available to bring Communion to those who want to receive it on that Sunday. Please call the church office (786-1594) and let us know if you aren't going to be able to be in church and would like to have Communion in your home.

The George Bailey family thanks our church friends for all the loving and kind sympathy cards we received. They were a great comfort in our time of sadness. Deep appreciation for your prayers.
